The Daily Quote

"Republicans are on the cusp this week of passing a historic overhaul of the U.S. tax system but might also be ushering in a new period of instability in the tax code, because the plan is advancing without bipartisan support and with expiration dates that guarantee it will be revisited for years... Congress will need to make substantive and technical corrections as problems arise, said Martin Sullivan, chief economist at Tax Analysts, a nonprofit publisher of tax notes. 'It's just the beginning. It's a whole new chapter,' he said. 'It's built on unstable financial foundations and on unstable political foundations. And it was built in great haste.'"
